Center for Children and Families

Erikson's new Center for Children and Families provides the highest quality family-centered assessment and treatment services for children birth to age 8.

WE SPECIALIZE IN

Social and developmental concerns

Depression and anxiety, including separation anxiety and school anxieties

Regulatory concerns, including attention, hyperactivity, sleep, and eating problems

Behavior challenges, including aggressiveness and defiance

Parent-child relationship/attachment concerns

Sibling rivalry

Academic and learning concerns

Grief, loss, and other trauma

Developmental delays

WE OFFER

Comprehensive, interdisciplinary child assessments to help parents and service providers determine appropriate ways to respond to, support, teach, and advocate for their child.

Therapeutic interventions

Individually tailored therapy based on a thorough understanding of the whole child in close collaboration with the parents. Child, parent-child, and family intervention options.

Early Intervention

Parent-child social-emotional intervention and developmental therapy as part of the Illinois Early Intervention Service System.

Family-centered medical diagnostic assessments

as part of the Illinois Early Intervention Service System.

The Fussy Baby Network

provides support to parents during their baby's first year of life. Infant specialists will work with parents to find more ways to soothe, care for, and enjoy their baby, and to explore ways to reduce early parenting stress.

INTERDISCIPLINARY TEAM

The Center's expert clinical staff is drawn from the areas of psychology, developmental pediatrics, clinical social work, child development, occupational therapy, speech-language, and early childhood mental health.
