Child Life Concentration, Master of Science in Child Development

Learn to advocate for children and their families in health-care settings as they cope with chronic and acute illness, injury, or trauma. As a part of the health care team, child life specialists provide evidence-based, developmentally appropriate interventions to address the psychosocial needs of children and families. They also provide outreach, support and education for caregivers and siblings. Erikson's child life concentration will help you develop specialized skills to help children and families understand their complex health care challenges and to minimize the stresses and anxieties brought on by medical procedures and the hospitalization experience.

The program meets the academic standards set forth by the Association of Child Life Professionals (ACLP). Upon completion of the degree program, you will be eligible to sit for the Child Life Professional Certification Examination.

The concentration includes six child life courses that will provide you with a foundation in effective child life practice. This program includes a two-semester internship, with a minimum of 600 hours under supervision of a Certified Child Life Specialist in an approved child life clinical program. We will support you in securing an internship with mentoring and coaching. You may choose to apply for an internship at a Chicago area hospital or to any nationally accredited clinical site for your internship.

Career Opportunities

Graduates of the Child Life concentration can pursue careers as certified child life specialists in hospitals and community-based medical centers.

Why Erikson?

- A core curriculum in child development that can be applied in many settings.
- Gain real-world experience with a two-semester internship.
- Access to dedicated advisors, academic writing support, library, career services and student services.

The coursework in child development at Erikson helped me stand out in a competitive field, as I was able to demonstrate career-related knowledge that is essential for a child life specialist.”
